Q1) Read the passage carefully and choose the correct option. (5)

There was a time, not long ago, when most people thought that the blind could never read. People thought that the only way to read was to look at words with one's eyes. Louis Braille did not think so. Blind from the age of three, Louis longed to read. He was sent to a special school for the blind in Paris. This school had special books for the blind people to read. These books had large letters that were raised up off the pages. Since the letters were big, the books were large and bulky. They were also very costly. Louis wanted to feel the words on a page quickly and read like people who could see. He soon found a way to do so. One day, he heard that the French army used an alphabet code. The code was to help soldiers read in the dark. It was made up of small dots and dashes. The symbols were also raised up off the papers. The soldiers read by running their fingers over them in the dark. But even this code needed a lot of space. Louis Braille improved upon this code. He created an alphabet code made of only six dots. The position of the dots stood for the different letters of the alphabet. He punched out sentences which he could read very quickly. Today, we call this special code the Braille Code.
